Lisa,

I was able to confirm a 50/50 split as far back as September 1995.

Hope this helps,

Stephen

Subject: Stanford research study on university patent revenue sharing policies

Dear Mr. Snider,

I am a professor at Stanford Law School and am researching the effect of university patent revenue sharing policies (e.g., variations in the percentage of income that the inventor receives as personal income or lab support). We hope our results will be of use to tech transfer offices and universities that are considering revising their policies. So far, we have gathered historical revenue sharing policies for over 150 institutions.

Our understanding is that the former Medical College of Ohio was merged with the University of Toledo in 2006, and that at that point—and at least as far back as 2003—MCO gave inventors 50% of net royalties. If there someone in your office who might know what MCO's policy was before 2003?

Thanks for any help you can provide!

All the best,
Lisa
